You may ask...

Why did we name the restaurant “Crazy Cow Café”?

Looking back, we guess it all started with a miserable fence staple jabbed deep into one of our cow’s hooves which, in her defense, would probably put the best natured cow in a bad mood. There are enough stories to fill a dozen headstones of us trying to catch her to get that staple out. You would think she would have been a little grateful when we finally did get it out — but Nooo... We may have got the miserable staple unstuck but the miserable attitude stuck for good! The trick was to never and, we mean NEVER, turn your back on her. Honestly, we think she taught our kids to cuss. With her it was never “Holy Cow” it was... Holy_____!

She was not, by any stretch, what you would call an easy keeper. From flipping over 4-wheelers, to chasing us over fences and up a telephone pole like a frightened bear cub — this cow got the grand prize of the Craziest of Crazy Cows! She never hurt anybody, if you don’t count their pride, but it wasn’t because she didn’t try.

Each fall when it came time to sell off cows, she was top on the list. But that miserable cow had one redeeming trait, she was a great mom. So, year after year we would grudgingly pardon that cantankerous cow, risking our life and limb to tell yet another story about that Crazzzy Cow.

Whatever you do, don’t leave Beaver without eating at the Crazy Cow Café. Our beef is the best you will eat. But, if by chance you do bite into a burger that seems a little tough and perhaps has more than a little kick to it — it might not be the jalapenos - it just might be that Crazy Cow!

Billy Summers ate at the Crazy Cow Café!

Crazy Cow is in "Billy Summers" by Stephen King

"They stop for the night in Beaver, Utah. It’s another motel of the no-tell variety, but not too bad. They get chicken baskets at the Crazy Cow and a couple of cans of Bud at Ray’s 66 on the way back. Later they sit outside their adjoining rooms, draw the obligatory lawn chairs close, and drink the cold beer."
